The executive council has been moving forward positively:

- we have new financial footings, with our funds moved to the National Bank of Canada and advice obtained from auditors and the Canada Revenue Agency
- we are able to again support initiatives of members and organizations—for example, at this meeting watch for the Wikipedia editathon and the exhibit on Cree by the Canadian Languages Museum/Musée canadien des langues
- we have given consideration to a suggestion from the Linguistic Society of America to make formal linkages between our two organizations

At its executive meeting the council established three new committees:

Taxes and CRA

- Last year, we decided to hire David Robertson (Prentice, Yates & Clark) because of the strategy he proposed to deal with CRA
 - CLA had not filed taxes for 13 years
- Upon his recommendation, in February 2015, we filed taxes for the years 2011-2014
 - CRA indicated that we did not owe any taxes
 - There is still a small chance that CRA may request taxes for the years we have not filed.

- La principale raison est d'avoir une meilleure représentativité des domaines de recherche.

5.3 É. Mathieu et E. Cowper), direction de la Revue canadienne de linguistique (L'assemblée générale entérine ce rapport).

- Editor: Éric Mathieu (University of Ottawa)
- Co-editor: Elizabeth Cowper (University of Toronto)
- New book review editor: Heather Newell (UQAM)
- (Thank you Arsalan Kahnemuyipour)
- Squibs editor: Réjean Canac-Marquis (Simon Fraser)
- Editorial assistant: Brandon Fry (University of Ottawa)
- I am told the CLA was founded 60 years ago in 1955 and the March issue thus begins volume 60 of the Canadian Journal of Linguistics. This is a real achievement, since not all periodicals in the humanities and the social sciences have survived that long.
- I would like to take this opportunity to thank Christina Thiele for her professionalism, attention to detail, and diligence. She has been our typesetter for 32 years and is a pillar of the journal.
- Thanks also to Brandon Fry who has been doing a great job!
- Two new board members: Hamida Demirdache (Université de Nantes) and Heidi Harley (University of Arizona)

Comments:

- Many more submissions.
 - o Larger/more central location than last year?
- Switch to EasyChair went smoothly, functioned much better than EasyAbs.
 - o Use EasyChair again next year.
- We expanded the number of reviewers by recruiting 8 additional sub-reviewers outside of the committee.

Sub-reviewers should be recruited earlier (perhaps at the final call for papers) and called in depending on the number of submissions

5.6 D. Currie Hall, prix pour les communications étudiantes

- 1. 2014
- The 2014 prizes were organized by Pat Balcom and Daniel Currie Hall, members-at-large. Association members whose abstracts were accepted for presentation were asked to identify whether they wished to be considered for the prizes (if they were students) or were willing to serve as judges (if they were faculty or postdocs). Balcom prepared the initial assignment of judges to presentations, which was checked over by Hall. Judges were provided with evaluation forms, and encouraged to provide comments, particularly for those presentations to which they assigned the highest numerical scores. During the conference, Balcom compiled the results, and both members-at-large facilitated the meeting of judges at the end of the conference to determine the winners. Hall communicated the results to Leslie Saxon, president.

Procedures

- The 2014 prizes were organized by Pat Balcom and Daniel
- Currie Hall, members-at-large.
- Association members whose abstracts were accepted for
- presentation were asked to identify whether they wished to be
- considered for the prizes or serve as judges.
- Balcom prepared the initial assignment of judges to
- presentations, which was checked over by Hall.
- Judges were provided with evaluation forms, and encouraged to
- provide comments.
- During the conference, Balcom compiled the results, and both
- members-at-large facilitated the meeting of judges at the end of
- the conference to determine the winners.
- Hall communicated the results to Leslie Saxon, president.

Best student oral presentation: Naomi Francis (University of Toronto), “This predicate is tasty: Predicates of personal taste, faultless disagreement, and the ideal judge”

- Francis’s talk addressed problems in the semantics and pragmatics of statements such as “This cake is tasty,” proposing that the truth of such assertions is evaluated with reference to a notional ‘ideal judge’ and showing how this proposal can account for, among other things, the fact that two speakers may disagree about the truth of such a statement without either of them being objectively wrong. The judges were impressed by the depth and sophistication of the content, by Francis’s clear and engaging presentation style, and by her excellent responses to the many comments and questions the talk inspired.

Best student poster presentation: Danica MacDonald, (University of Calgary), “From a classifier language to a mass-count language: What can historical data show us?”

- MacDonald’s poster reported on her study of a corpus of Korean newspaper articles to analyze the changing use of the morpheme -tul, arguing that it is shifting from a marker of focus to a marker of plurality. The poster itself was attractively designed and clearly organized, and MacDonald’s presentation of the content was lively and confident; the judges were impressed by her engagement with the wide range of questions raised by the topic, which touches on language change, sociolinguistics, syntax, and semantics.
- This year, the members-at-large are Ivona Kučerová and Daniel Currie Hall.
- As before, conference participants were asked to identify themselves as potential participants or judges.
- Hall prepared the initial assignment of judges to presentations, which was checked over by Kučerová.
- As of this writing, there are 47 student presentations to be evaluated, and 27 evaluators.
- A meeting of judges is scheduled for 18:00 on Monday, June 1st to determine the winners.

4. General remarks on procedures

- The main criteria by which judges are assigned to presentations:
- Each student presentation should be evaluated by (at least) three judges.
- Judges should not be asked to evaluate students from their own institutions, or students whom they have previously taught or supervised.
- Judges cannot be asked to be in two places at once.
- Talks and posters should be evaluated by judges who are proficient in the language of presentation.
- Judges should (if possible!) be matched with presentations that are in their own areas of interest and expertise.

Lesson learned: Conditional formatting is your friend.

5.7 E. Mathieu, comité du prix de l'association

OUR FOURTH EXHIBIT: 'CREE: THE PEOPLE'S LANGUAGE'

Our latest bilingual exhibit was once again produced in partnership with the Museum Studies MA program at the University of Toronto.

Kevin Brousseau, Cree Language Coordinator of the Cree Nation Government in Oujé-Bougoumou, Quebec was the main consultant for the exhibit's content.

Marie-Odile Junker allowed us to use her Algonquian Linguistic Atlas as a resource for the exhibit's audio content.
